

Episode Guide

Stepping Stones, Parts 1 and 2

Mr. Whittaker uses the enhanced Kids' Radio studio to tell the kids the true story of the Puritans and their voyage to North America, their hardships, and their new life.

The Midnight Ride

Whit tells Marsha the whole story of Paul Revere's ride, the Boston Tea Party, America's quest for independence . . . and "the shot heard 'round the world."

The American Revelation, Parts 1 and 2

Marvin Washington wonders if there were any African Americans involved in the Revolutionary War. Whit uses the Imagination Station to send him back to 1775, where he learns about Peter Salem.

The Day Independence Came

When Irwin Springer falls off a chair and is knocked unconscious, he is transported back in time to the Revolutionary War. Later he awakens in the library at Whit's End. It was all just a dream . . . or was it?

By Dawn's Early Light

Curt Stevens and Lucy take a trip in the Imagination Station back to the year 1812. They witness the torching of Washington, D.C., British Admiral George Cockburn's epic bombardment of Fort McHenry, and the composition of our national anthem by a young lawyer named Francis Scott Key.

A Single Vote

Connie feels that one vote can't possibly make a difference. But then Whit tells her the story of one ordinary man with one ordinary vote that was directly responsible for Texas becoming a state.

The Underground Railroad, Parts 1, 2, and 3

A curator for a museum in Chicago tells Jack Allen the story of the Underground Railroad and the Ross family—Tennessee slaves who broke their bonds and escaped to freedom on the Underground Railroad.

Lincoln, Parts 1 and 2

Jimmy Barclay thinks history is one long snooze and that the Imagination Station isn't nearly as exciting as the Zapazoids video game. But when Whit programs the Station to take Jimmy back to 1865 to meet Abraham Lincoln, Jimmy discovers how wrong he is.

Sergeant York, Parts 1, 2, 3, and 4

Eugene Meltsner and Red Hollard tell the story of Sergeant Alvin York, a troublemaker from rural Tennessee, who became a World War I hero.

East Winds, Raining

Connie's Uncle Joe Finneman tells her about the bravest man he ever knew, Sam Saburo. Sam was a Japanese naval intelligence officer who worked with Joe in Pearl Harbor.

Rescue from Manatugo Point

Whit flashes back to his adventures as a signalman for the Navy in World War II. Young Whit and his commander lead a team onto the island at Manatugo Point to rescue an injured soldier.

Operation: Dig-Out

Whit tells Connie the story of the World War II battle in which he was wounded while protecting his lieutenant. Whit's bravery changes his commander's life forever.

The War Hero

Joe Finneman refuses to admit he is a hero when Dale Jacobs and Connie Kendall question him about a medal of bravery he won in the war. The children he rescued remember and celebrate his heroism.

The Price of Freedom

A teacher criticizes ten-year-old Kirk McGinty's war-hero father and the war he fought in. Kirk's mother and Whit step in to set them both straight.

Memories of Jerry

Jason tells Connie about his brother Jerry, and how he died tragically in Vietnam.
